Buying Time

By Erika Hval

Not enough time for those annoying, tedious tasks like grocery shopping and running everyday errands? Finding it hard to complete those tasks with the energy you had when you were younger? Whether you see time as money and need an efficient way to handle extra odd jobs or you simply request help to take the burden off yourself, WestFetch Personal Delivery and Concierge Service has just the solution you desire. Created by Craig Muniz, WestFetch aims to "provide time people can get back into their day" and allow the elderly or disabled to "maintain freedom".

While common chores and their accompanying fees may be found on the company website, WestFetch prides itself on being limited in assistance only "by the customer's imagination and law." They've personally delivered letters, pressure washed homes, and done pet-sitting for horse owners. They'll wait in lines, sell your things on E-bay, and board your dogs, they've even been asked to watch a pet monkey; the possibilities seem endless. Based out of – where else- West Chase, the business services most of the Hillsborough, Pasco and Pinellas area, though the rates vary depending on distance, as well as duty.

WestFetch also offers memberships that while "not required, are advantageous for repeat customers." Depending on the service, clients pay a monthly fee to receive a percentage discount towards each employment.

WestFetch is part of a popular business trend that supplies the closest alternative to buying time. Overwhelmed businessmen, overbooked family members, and the overworked in general can all find benefits from a personal concierge service. Think of a day without that extra drive to the dry cleaners, without that stop at the post office, and even without cooking because WestFetch will pick up dinner at your favorite restaurant and deliver it right to your door. Even businesses can benefit; have lunch delivered for the entire floor and see the time and energy saved. The advantages are obvious and the only thing that's left to ponder is what task to give WestFetch first.
